FATE OF GERMAN PLANS HANGS ON PRESENT BATTLE

BOTH SIDES ADMIT GRAVE CRISIS

Kaiser Says Petrograd Report Has Narrow Escape from Being Captured By Russians While on the Western Battle Front. Russians Winning.

By Associated Press.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—Superlatives have been so frequently used in the attempts to describe the engagements of the present war that the emphasis of such terms as "most desperate," "violent" and "crucial" have been weakened by daily use but today as if by mutual agreement both German and British newspapers characterize the conflict along the front from Lille, in France, to the Belgian seaboard as the greatest struggle of all.

London newspapers were quick to seize the suggestion of a German military expert as cabled here from Berlin that this is the critical conflict of the whole campaign and whether this be so or not it is conceded that the outcome is likely to decide the future of German operations in France.

Reinforcements of 60,000 men are said to have been rushed to the German right wing, and it seems no exaggeration to say that these operations spell the supreme efforts of the invaders to break through the allies line.

Being denied the use of warships which have been rendering good service for the allies, Germany is said to be throwing her aircraft and particularly Zeppelins more and more into the fray and news dispatches relate that the operations of Zeppelins have been a marked feature of the fighting to the southwest of Ostend toward which seaport the troops of France, England and Belgium are said to be working their way.

This in brief is a broad view of the situation in France and Belgium from the English standpoint. Which side had the advantage when dawn broke or when noon came or which will have it when the sun sets will not be

HALLOWE'EN PARADE TO BE HELD NEXT FRIDAY NIGHT

Contributions to Prize Fund Generous on First Day's Canvass.

At a meeting last night of the West Side Volunteer Fire Department, Councilmen Wright and Evans, Secretary Luce of the Y. M. C. A. and Professor Fred Nelson further plans for the monster Hallowe'en [illegible] were [illegible]. This will be held next Friday evening and the parade will move promptly at 7:30 o'clock.

A line of march similar to that of the firemen's convention parade was outlined as follows: Form on South Pittsburg street, proceed to Crawford avenue, west to Seventh street, West Side, down Seventh street encircling the Western Maryland railroad to Main street, east to [illegible] street, [illegible] by way of Meadow lane, [illegible] Fayette street to Pittsburg street and [illegible] to the Fourth ward school building where the parade will disband. Doughnuts and apples will be distributed to the kiddies at the Fourth ward building after the parade. No arrangements have been made for the [illegible] but bakers and wholesale men will be visited today and Monday.

As has been the custom in former years the school children will assemble at the [illegible] buildings at 7 o'clock ready to proceed to the South Side. Volunteer firemen will be placed at the place of forming to care for the children. Alarm boxes on the South Side will also be guarded.

The soliciting committee was unable to cover all the ground yesterday and as a result it was impossible to complete the prize list. The prizes will not be made known until next Tuesday. Councilmen Wright and Evans and Secretary Luce canvassed Main street yesterday and it is stated gathered in quite a large sum of money.

WOODROW WILSON IS GUEST OF THE PITTSBURG Y. M. C. A.

President Pays a Non-Political Visit to the Steel City.

GOES THROUGH CONNELLSVILLE

Is Carried on Special Train Made Up Here and Will Return on No. 16 This Afternoon. Leaves His Special at Braddock and Goes Past Big Mills.

By Associated Press.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 24.—President Woodrow Wilson is in Pittsburg today to address a philanthropic religious mass meeting, [illegible] called together in commemoration of a double anniversary of the Y. M. C. A., that of the foundation of the Pittsburg branch 60 years ago and the organization movement itself in London in 1844. The President had let it be known that his visit would be of a non-political character, therefore no visitors were scheduled to call upon him during his short stay here and no public reception had been planned.

While the President's train arrived at 8:40 he was not officially in the city until he presented himself at Exposition Hall at 11 o'clock where he began speaking at 11:30. The President dealt with his physician, Dr. Cary T. Grayson, and Secretary Joseph Tumulty.

The President left the train at Braddock, 10 miles from the city, shortly after 8 o'clock, debarking in the shadow of the big steel mills. Scarcely a score of persons saw the President and his party hurried into a waiting automobile. His wishes that his visit be devoid of ostentation being carried out.

The hours of the morning were taken up by an automobile ride over the excellent roads and picturesque hills [illegible] through the [illegible] great plants of the Carnegie Steel [illegible] circuitous route into the city and thence direct to the hall where the President talked about 40 minutes.

WILSON SPECIAL MADE UP IN CONNELLSVILLE

President Woodrow Wilson arrived here this morning at [illegible] o'clock over the Baltimore & Ohio railroad on his way to Pittsburg where he will be the principal speaker at the celebration of the seventieth anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association of that city. He left Washington at midnight in his private car [illegible] attached to train No. 9.

Captain F. H. Russell of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad left for Cumberland last night and came as far as Connellsville on the train. Here Captain Thomas Delehanty of the Baltimore & Ohio police of Pittsburg boarded the train and accompanied the party to Pittsburg.

On the arrival of No. 9 here the President's car was detached and a train was made up. In addition to the President's private car there was one day coach and a baggage car. It was not known that the President would pass through here and there were but few persons at the station. He did not make his appearance. He is expected to leave Pittsburg this afternoon at [illegible] o'clock arriving in Connellsville about [illegible] o'clock.

TREMENDOUS OVATION IS GIVEN REPUBLICAN STATE CANDIDATES DURING THEIR TOUR OF FAYETTE

Enthusiasm for Brumbaugh, Houck and Others on Ticket Reaches Climax in Greatest Political Rally Ever Held in Fayette County.

THOUSANDS ARE IN LINE IN THE BIG UNIONTOWN PARADE

PARADE BANNERS SHOW SENTIMENT OF WORKINGMEN

The banners carried in the parade demonstrated the attitude of the workingmen in the present campaign. Here are some of them:

Labor Fell When Penrose.

100 Men Wanted to Cut Weeds in the Coke Yards.

War Tax in Times of Peace. Labor Pays For It.

Four Days a Week. We Used to Have Six.

Give Us the Work. We Can Do It.

Who Throttled the Coke Ovens? Palmer.

Penrose Promotes Prosperity.

Crow Creates Confidence.

Brumbaugh Boosts Business.

Patriotism, Prosperity, Protection and Penrose.

21,000 Idle Coke Ovens.

A demonstration unprecedented in the political annals of Fayette county marked the reception accorded Dr. Martin G. Brumbaugh and other state candidates at Uniontown last night, the climax of a day of ovations which featured the tour of the party from Connellsville to the county seat by way of Brownsville.

In neither numbers nor enthusiasm has anything in the county ever equalled the demonstration. It demonstrated beyond the peradventure of a doubt that the blight brought upon the county's industries by Democratic misrule cannot be overcome on the part of the Democrats by ignoring the real issues and substituting for them a campaign of abuse and villification.

Sentiment in Fayette county is overwhelmingly Republican. The Republican leaders hoped for a good turnout in Uniontown but they were unprepared for what really happened. Men from all parts of the county swarmed into the county seat during the afternoon and evening until thousands had gathered. It was a multitude that marched in the parade and lined the streets for dozens of blocks to witness it.

The Democratic and Progressive organizations of Fayette county are dazed today. The unprecedented demonstration which marked the visit of the state candidates to Uniontown has swept from them the last vestige of hope they may have held for success at the polls next month. Never was there a clearer indication of a landslide and a Republican landslide at that.

Persons who know declare that the parade last night was witnessed by the largest crowd that ever gathered in Uniontown for any purpose. Officials of the West Penn say they never handled such a crowd. Twenty special cars carried paraders and spectators into the county seat and home again. This is a record.

The demonstration was unprecedented. The last big political rally held in Uniontown was during the campaign of Governor Edward S. Stuart in 1906. It was considered a remarkable demonstration at that time but it pales to insignificance as compared with the reception accorded Dr. Martin G. Brumbaugh and his fellow candidates.

The parade itself outshone anything that Uniontown has ever experienced along that line. It took an hour for the line to pass a given point and the march was not interrupted either. It was a solid phalanx of bands, foot marchers, horses and automobiles fully two miles long. Most of the marchers were from the busy coke towns in the southern end of the county although Connellsville, Point Marion, Brownsville, Masontown and other communities were well represented. There were eight bands, more than 200 automobiles, a score of floats and several hundred banners that contained rather original campaign slogans.

From the time Dr. Brumbaugh and his party drove into Uniontown and led a string of 75 automobiles and headed by a massed band consisting of 15 organizations until the last street cars departed last night, Uniontown's streets were jammed. The order was excellent. No town in Fayette county has had a celebration during which there was a more general observance of the decencies of the occasion. It wasn't a rowdy crowd but a mass of men sobered into a sense of responsibility that has been forced upon them by the utter failure of a Democratic administration to appreciate the needs of an industrial community.

"We Want Work" was the keynote of the marchers. Their banners expressed their attitude in the campaign. Their very attitude breathed the atmosphere of serious determination to right their wrongs on election day by voting the Republican ticket. The marchers rather than the speakers made Republican victory in the air. The speakers reflected the sentiment of the county; the campaign orations were rather an endorsement of just sentiment than a mere plea for support at the polls.

Dr. Brumbaugh, Henry Houck, Colonel Thomas S. Crago, M. M. Garland and D. F. Lafean, the state candidates, were enthusiastic at the reception. Brumbaugh, Houck and Crago toured the county yesterday and had a better opportunity to gauge the sentiment than had the others. All of them who had come to Uniontown firm in the belief that nowhere would they find the wave of Republican enthusiasm as high as in Greensburg the night before, declared that nowhere

SHOT BY THIEVES

Brier Hill Man Attacked by Men Stealing His Chickens.

Special to The Courier.

UNIONTOWN, October 24.—As the result of a shooting at Brier Hill this morning, Charles Duree is in the Uniontown Hospital in a critical condition and James Dolly, [illegible], Sam Kenmo, John Call, Louie Ross, [illegible] Greasley, Patsy Chiero and Dominic Bianco are in the Uniontown jail pending an investigation into the shooting. All but three of the men arrested were found in the home of [illegible] Greasley.

The shooting occurred when Duree went into his chicken coop and found the men in the act of stealing his chickens. When he entered the coop one of the men called out his name and another, said to be Sam Kenmo, drew a 38-calibre revolver and fired. One of the bullets entered his abdomen and lodged in his liver and the other three entered his arm. It is alleged that Patsy Chiero and John Call made their escape with the chickens. They were later arrested with the other men. All are foreigners.

Mrs. C. L. [illegible], one of the oldest and best known residents of Confluence, is today celebrating her eighty-fifth birthday in the presence of her relatives and friends. Among the guests are Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Brown and family of Dawson. Mr. Brown is a son of Mrs. Brown.

War's Worst Battle.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—A Berlin dispatch states that the battle raging between Nieuport and Dixmude is the most violent and the most important engagement of the entire war. Zeppelins are said to have given the Germans considerable support.

known except to the general staffs of the opposing armies. All the public will know, barring something unforeseen in the nature of a catastrophe to one or another, will be that the terrific artillery duel near the Belgian coast has continued and that one side was pushed back here only to advance there.

That the Russians, generally speaking, continue to hold the upper hand in the eastern arena of the war is the gist of most of the dispatches reaching London and accepting these as true, England thinks that the putting of Germany on the defensive in this territory will prevent her from transferring any forces to the western arena, a plan so often discussed during the early stages of the war.

FRENCH REPORT BOTH REVERSES AND VICTORIES

By Associated Press:

PARIS, Oct. 24.—The official communication given out at the war office this afternoon says the Germans have made progress to the north of Dixmude and in the vicinity of LaBassee, but that the French have made material advances to the east of Nieuport in the region of Langemarck and between Armentieres and Lille.

RUSSIANS ATTACKED AFTER CROSSING SAN.

By Associated Press.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—An official Austrian statement is contained in a dispatch from Vienna by way of Amsterdam. It says,

"In the battle south of Przemysl our heavy artillery has been especially active. Severe fighting developed today on the lower banks of the San, where at several points we allowed the enemy to cross the river. These Russian forces have now been severely attacked by our troops and pressed against the river. At Zarzecz we captured over 1,000 Russians. Parts of our troops suddenly appeared before Ivangorod and beat two Russian divisions. We captured 7,000 prisoners, one standard and 15 machine guns. Returning from a successful action on the River Save our monitor, the Temes struck a mine and sank. Thirty-three men are missing, but the others were saved."

GERMANS LEAVE COAST; RIGHT WING DRIVEN BACK.

By Associated Press.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—"The Germans are leaving the coast and working round Dixmude to Lille," says a Rotterdam report. "They claim successes on the Yser.

"Their extreme right wing was rolled [illegible] leaving their position [illegible] Ruik [illegible] movement and the [illegible] to Ostend clear.

SCIENCE HITS THE COFFEE DRINKERS

Familiar Table Beverage Unmasked and Its Full Effect on the Human Body Shown.

An astonishing list of ills due to coffee drinking is pointed out by Dr. Otto Juettner, of the Cincinnati Polyclinic, in a communication to the New York Medical Times. "The symptoms produced by excessive indulgence in coffee can be observed in the arrested physical and mental development of children, their pallor, emaciation and nervousness, in the morbidly excited condition of women who are addicted to the coffee-pot just as the toper is to the whiskey bottle and no less a helpless and pitiable victim than he; in professional men and students who whip up their mental faculties by coffee, in the aged whose tremor and [illegible] are not infrequently due to excessive indulgence in coffee.

"Coffee poisoning in its chronic form may be the cause of tremor, of ringing in the ears, of aerial eructations, of severe continuous headaches, creeping, pricking sensations in the skin, sensations of heat and cold, hysterical attacks, troubles of vision, dizziness, insomnia, all kinds of digestive disturbances. Coffee depresses the kidney functions and kidney symptoms are probably due to irritation from retained waste.

"Patients who cannot get along [illegible] coffee, but feel miserable and even sick when deprived of these stimulants, are to all intents and purposes drug fiends, and should be classified with habitues of tobacco, alcohol, opium and other toxic agents."

NOTE—It is interesting to observe that as medical science more and more reveals the harmfulness of coffee to the health of both young and old there follows a tremendous increase in the use of the pure food beverage, POSTUM.—Adv.

SOCIETY.

Every Member Canvass.

About 75 men from the Cochran Memorial Church at Dawson met last night at Linden Hall, the home of Mrs. Sarah B. Cochran, in the interest of the every member canvass tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, at which time 15 teams will canvass every member of the church. Following the services in the evening, each team will submit a report of the number of subscriptions received and the aggregate amount. A short program consisting of musical numbers, addresses on plans for financing the church, and a practical demonstration of canvassing was carried out after which the house was thrown open to the men for inspection. Refreshments were served.

Tomorrow morning a harvest home service will be held. Rev. H. A. Baum will preach on "Christian Stewardship." The church has been decorated for the occasion and the aged and feeble will be conveyed to and from the church in automobiles.

Engagement Announced.

At an informal tea given yesterday afternoon by Mr. Lawrence P. Monahan at her home in Pittsburg, the hostess announced the engagement of her sister, Miss Elizabeth Bertha Wurtz to Albert Edward Murphy of the East End, Pittsburg. Miss Wurtz formerly resided at Dawson and has a number of friends in Connellsville.

Aid Society Meets.

The semi-monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First Baptist Church was held last evening at the home of Mrs. Z. S. Moon on Carnegie avenue with many members in attendance. A business meeting was held and readings were given by Miss Innocence Rhodes. Dainty refreshments were served. Mrs. John Moon of McKeesport, sister of the hostess, was an out of town guest. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Santmyer on East Murphy avenue.

An Engagement Is Announced.

The engagement of Miss Bessie Rensen of near Connellsville to William B. Bush of Scottdale was recently announced. The wedding will be an event of the late fall.

Afternoon at Auction Bridge.

Mrs. J. Hall Spear of Pittsburg, a recent bride, was honor guest at a [illegible] arranged auction bridge party at which Mrs. H. P. Snyder was hostess yesterday afternoon at her home in East Fairview avenue. Charming pink and white bridal appointments prevailed and five tables were called into requisition. Mrs. Spear was awarded the guest's prize while prizes at each table were won by Mrs. L. P. McCormick, Mrs. H. C. Hoffman, Mrs. Edna Johnston Brooks, Miss Mary Snyder and Miss Gertrude Madigan. Luncheon was served at the close of the games. Out of town guests were Mrs. B. P. Boyts of Wilkinsburg, Mrs. John Armstrong of Brownsville and Mrs. Aloysius Coll of Clarksburg, W. Va.

Entertains Card Club.

Mrs. J. L. Evans was hostess at the regular meeting of the Friday Afternoon Bridge Whist Club yesterday afternoon at her home in Crawford avenue. Three tables were brought into play and following the games a luncheon was served. Mrs. J. A. Lyon will entertain the club Friday afternoon, November 6, at her home in East Main street.

Shower For Bride-elect.

Miss Mary Eckman, whose marriage to Harry Keenan of the West Side, will be an event of the near future was tendered a surprise miscellaneous shower Thursday night at her home on Johnston avenue by the J. P. Girls' Club, of which she is a member. She received a number of handsome and useful gifts. The evening was delightfully spent at various amusements and dainty refreshments were served.

Baby Week.

Baby week will be observed next week at Cuthbertson & Rae's store, successors to E. Dunn. The affair will take place of the annual baby day reception given by E. Dunn and arrangements are being made to entertain hundreds of babies. Monday a babies party will be held from 10 to 12 o'clock and from 2 P. M. to 5 P. M. Eight prizes will be awarded in a weight contest and a very handsome silver loving cup will be given to the most popular baby, the cup being donated by the Imperial Graham Food Company. This is to be decided by vote. Any person making a purchase during baby week will be entitled to a vote for each purchase. The voting will close Saturday night at 9 o'clock.

All babies up to 18 months are eligible to the silver loving cup prize.

Guests at Masquerade Party.

Mrs. Pearl McClintock, Mrs. Mary White, Mrs. Margaret Trump, Mrs. Clara Craft, Mrs. Anna Bell Dunbin, Mrs. Whipkey, Miss Ella Mae Craft, Miss Bertha Shultz were out of town guests at a masquerade party given last evening in the Second National Bank building, Uniontown by the Daughters of America.

I. C. Club Meets.

The I. C. Musical and Literary Club held its regular semi-monthly meeting last night in the Parochial school.

WHITEWASH BANNED.

No More Defacing Streets by Football Signs.

Orders prohibiting the whitewashing of sidewalks before the football games were issued by Mayor Marietta this morning. The mayor told the police to warn the enthusiastic rooters that this practice must stop. Last evening several rooters painted signs announcing the Connellsville-Uniontown game on the main streets of the city. In doing so whitewash was splashed over the different streets, which this morning presented a bad appearance.

A fine of $50 and costs can be imposed upon persons disfiguring sidewalks. The mayor stated that chalk signs would be permitted but no more whitewash.

PRAISES B. & O. FIREMEN

Letter From Vice President Received by Chief Brennan.

A panoramic picture of the Baltimore & Ohio fire department, taken on North Pittsburg street after the parade during the firemen's convention here, together with a single photograph of A. McCormick, who led the railroad division, appears in this month's issue of the Baltimore & Ohio Employes' Magazine.

The picture shows the members in their navy blue coats and white trousers grouped about their apparatus, with T. J. Brennan the chief, at the right. An account of the firemen's convention parade appearing in The Courier impelled A. W. Thompson, third vice president of the road, to write the following letter of congratulation to Mr. Brennan:

T. J. Brennan,
Baltimore & Ohio Fire Department.
Dear Sir:—

It was with genuine pleasure that I noted in the Connellsville Weekly Courier of August 20, what a splendid showing the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Fire Department had made in the parade of the various fire companies through the city.

The showing which was made by your company is very gratifying to the management of the Baltimore & Ohio, and I desire to extend my congratulations for your fine appearance and the special mention you have received.

Sincerely yours,
A. W. THOMPSON,
Third Vice President.

RECEIVER FOR STORE

Railroad Employes' Corporation in Financial Straits.

K. M. Newcomer has been appointed receiver of the Railroad Employes' Corporation following the filing of a bill of complaint by Charles Chambers, a creditor and stockholder yesterday. The defendant concern operates two stores, one in Connellsville and the other in Somerset for the purpose of selling groceries and general merchandise.

The petition of Chambers which was presented before Judge Umbel alleges that the authorized capital of the company is $5,000. The assets of the company are estimated at $6,000. The debts include accounts payable amounting to about $5,000 and notes due the Somerset Trust Company amounting to $2,500. The petitioner declares that creditors are pressing payment and threatening suits with danger of judgments being obtained on three suits already entered.

Newcomer is directed to file a $12,000 bond before he can assume temporary receivership. The company is given 30 days to file an answer. McDonald & Cray represent the petitioner.

OFF TO JOHNSTOWN

Connellsville Confident of Putting Up Hard Battle.

The Connellsville High School football team, accompanied by a number of rooters, left this morning over the Pennsylvania railroad for Johnstown, where they play the high school this afternoon. Connellsville is confident that there will be no walkaway and the may have some little hopes of her own. Much interest is being taken in the backfield for this afternoon, especially the work of Menefee. He is a new face there, having played end before but is now taking the place of Duggan who had a ligament in his ankle torn Wednesday evening in scrimmage.

The score will be telegraphed to J. B. Marietta by Principal B. B. Smith as soon as the game is over.

Among those who made the trip were: Robert Buttermore, Reed Wingrove, Walter Rogers, Metzgar Sneak, Clyde Yothers, Alfred Kell, Arthur Darr, Frank Crolley, Joseph Menefee, Fred Marietta, Orland Leighty, Louis Bowman, Cyrus Kennel, Walter Harry, William Martray, John Cuneo, Gordon Herd and Robert Moyer.

MAUZY LOCATED.

Item in This paper Brings to Light Information as to His Whereabouts.

Through an item printed in The Courier this week asking for information as to the whereabouts of Paul Mauzy, who disappeared after leaving Connellsville, a local man informed Rev. J. L. Proudfit, who sought the information, that Mauzy is now a resident of Lancaster, Pa.

Reverend Proudfit has accordingly written to Mauzy's sister in Phillipsburg, Kansas, telling her where her brother, whom she has not seen since he was 16 years old, can be found. An insurance company is also making an efforts to determine the man's whereabouts.

Nurse Operated On.

Miss Isabella Smith, a student nurse at the Uniontown Hospital, had an operation performed Thursday for the removal of a dead bone from her foot, resulting from a sprained ankle which she suffered about two years ago. Miss Smith is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Smith of Greenwood.

Fayette county's disgrace is that she is the one county in Western Pennsylvania that has never cast an anti-saloon vote in the Legislature. Connellsville is largely responsible for this condition. The anti-saloon rally in Colonial Theatre on Sunday afternoon, October 25th, is to enlighten voters on the real contest now on in Pennsylvania—a contest between the saloon keepers and the friends of our boys. Doctor Moore can tell it, and he isn't afraid to do it. Come and hear him. Kilterie's orchestra will begin to play at 3 o'clock. A splendid male chorus will sing.—Adv.

RALLY AT INDIAN CREEK.

Republicans Cordially Receive Campaign Speakers.

Enthusiastic rallies were conducted by the Republicans at Mill Run and Normalville, in the Indian Creek valley today. At both places good-sized crowds turned out to hear the issues discussed.

Speeches were made by A. E. Jones, Lee Smith, R. F. Hopwood and S. R. Goldsmith. They urged their hearers to cast their votes for the return of prosperity, and their hearers were undoubtedly impressed with the arguments.

Bids Wanted.

Bids will be received by the Board of Directors of the School District of the City of Connellsville, Pennsylvania, for furnishing coal for the school buildings of the said city, up to 8 o'clock P. M., Monday, November 2, 1914. All bidders are asked to bid on West Virginia run of mine and Washington Run run of mine. The School Board reserves the right to accept or reject any or all bids. Camilla M. Munk, Secretary. Order of Connellsville School Board.—Adv.

Teachers' Institute.

A teachers' institute will be held Saturday, November 14, in the Broad Ford school by the teachers of the Upper Tyrone township schools. An interesting program is being arranged for the occasion.

WAS MISERABLE COULDN'T STAND

Testifies She Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lackawanna, N. Y.—"After my first child was born I felt very miserable and could not stand on my feet. My sister-in-law wished me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and my nerves became firm, appetite good, step elastic, and I lost that weak, tired feeling. That was six years ago and I have had three fine healthy children since. For female troubles I always take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it works like a charm. I do all my own work."—Mrs. A. F. KREAMER, 1574 Electric Avenue, Lackawanna, N. Y.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard remedy for female ills.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should be convinced of the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health by the many genuine and truthful testimonials we are constantly publishing in the newspapers.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Kidney Troubles Attack Connellsville Men and Women, Old and Young.

Kidney ills seize young and old.

Often come with little warning.

Children suffer in their early years—Can't control the kidney secretions.

Girls are languid, nervous, suffer pain.

Women worry, can't do daily work.

Men have lame and aching backs.

If you have any form of kidney ills,

You must reach the cause—the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys—

Have brought relief to Connellsville people.

Connellsville testimony proves it.

Mrs. Wilson Stillwagon, 218 Fairview avenue, Connellsville Pa., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have benefited me and others of the family. I had just an ordinary case of backache and was all run down. Doan's Kidney Pills put me in good shape. I don't know of any other medicine I could be so willing to recommend as Doan's Kidney Pills."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Stillwagon had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

DANCE AT DAWSON

Enjoyable Mock Leap Year Affair in Cochran Hall.

Cochran Banquet Hall at Dawson was the scene of an enjoyable mock leap year masquerade dance given last evening under the committeeship of Misses Marie and Grace Moore, Miss Mary Mong and Miss Ruth Hopwood. The affair was well appointed and was one of the largest social events given at Dawson for some time. Decorations in keeping with Hallowe'en predominated and the large hall presented a very attractive scene. Jack-o-lanterns, large bunches of fodder and witches, were lavishly used. The hours were from 8 to 2 o'clock and refreshments consisting of gingerbread, cider and fruit were served throughout the evening. About midnight there was a moonlight dance, the hall being dimly lighted with candles placed in large pumpkins.

Among the out of town guests were Miss Nelle Smith, Miss Marian Davidson, Attorney F. D. Munson, Stanley Jackson, Clarence Craft, and Robert Morton of Connellsville; Miss Jeannette Short, Star Junction, and Miss Elizabeth Anderson, Scottdale.

KEYSTONE STATE THE FIRST WITH MINERAL OUTPUT

So Far Ahead of Other States That It Stands Alone.

PRODUCT WORTH $700,000,000

United States Geological Survey Shows Superiority of Pennsylvania as Demonstrated by Reports for 1913, One-Fourth of United States Output

Pennsylvania so far exceeds all the rest of the states in the value of its mineral production as to stand first alone. Exclusive of the value of pig iron, coke and other derived or secondary products not included in the total, the value of Pennsylvania's mineral production is nearly one-fourth that of the entire country, and in 1913, according to figures of the United States Geological Survey, computed in cooperation with the Pennsylvania Topographic and Geologic Survey Commission, it equaled the combined value of the production of West Virginia, Illinois, Ohio and California, the next four states in the value of their mineral product.

MEN'S MEETING

Rev. H. S. Piper is the speaker at the men's meeting at the Young Men's Christian Association Sunday afternoon.

CARS ENTERED

Nine freight cars standing on the station siding were entered at this place on Thursday night. The robbery seems to have been the work of some one who was desperate at that sort of thing, counting the industry evidenced. The only thing gone was a box of shoes. Two meat cars were broken into. One was sent out to Mount Pleasant and the other to Uniontown, but it was thought nothing was taken according to reports from these places. In one car a basket of peaches was broken into and eight peaches taken.

STRASSBURG.

By GEORGE FITCH
Author of "At Good Old Siwash."

Strassburg, whose citizens wake up early each morning and run for the paper to see what country they now belong to, is situated 30 miles east of [illegible] called the French-German boundary. It is a city of 175,000 people and 20,000 soldiers and is the capital of Alsace-Lorraine.

Strassburg has been a military stronghold ever since the eighth [illegible] of the Romans occupied it, 1,800 years ago. The French captured it in the fifteenth century and in the Tenth century the Germans took it over, and ran it until 1681, when Louis XVI of France grabbed it and the long-suffering inhabitants had to change their [illegible] once more. In 1870 the Germans landed before Strassburg with several hundred [illegible] vicious guns and shot it so full of holes that it resembled fine Brussels lace when it surrendered seven weeks later.

Strassburg has been a German city since 1870. It is the only city in the world which possesses a tombstone in [illegible] is a monument to departed Strassburg and on the city's [illegible] is a [illegible] mourning [illegible] France is spending billions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of lives to get Strassburg back. It is fine to be so popular but [illegible] in the Strassburger sits in his cellar waiting for the shellshot and shrapnel [illegible] doubtless wishes that he could be overlooked for a little while.

Strassburg is a beautiful old city with quaint [illegible] houses built [illegible] before plumbing was heard of and a cathedral with a spire [illegible] feet high. It has a university, a library with 800,000 volumes in it and large numbers of fine new buildings which are completely overlooked by the tourists in their eagerness to find the [illegible] old restaurants with [illegible] hand carved fronts.

BRUMBAUGH AND CROW PLEDGE REAL WORKMAN COMPENSATION AT ROUSING REPUBLICAN RALLY

BRUMBAUGH SAYS HE KNOWS NO BOSS

[illegible]

FLEMING SUPPORTS DR. STAND OF W. E. CROW

[illegible]

Mr. Brumbaugh [illegible] Senator Crow is the friend of labor and told of his personal experience in having in Senate [illegible] legislation for organized labor. He concluded by saying:

"I want in conclusion to make this statement to the working people of Fayette county and the state. I am [illegible] of having a workmen's compensation law enacted. I have had perhaps better opportunities than many others to know how prevalent are the miseries and want and I deplore the fact that we do not have this compensation act on our statute books. If you will agree with me after all the efforts I have put forth and if you will continue to be guided by me you will return William E. Crow to the state senate and I will assure you that when the next session convenes there will be a compensation law passed and that you will have reason to say that you have done well by the working people of Pennsylvania by sending him back."

TREMENDOUS OVATION GIVEN REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES DURING TOUR OF FAYETTE

in the state have they been given such an ovation.

At every stop yesterday the contrast between the welcome given the Republican state candidates and that accorded A. Mitchell Palmer and Vance C. McCormick, the Democratic candidates, during their recent tour became more marked.

Brumbaugh and Houck found more persons awaiting them in Connellsville at 8 o'clock in the morning than went to hear Palmer and McCormick here at 8 o'clock at night. McCormick and Palmer were scheduled to speak. Brumbaugh and Houck were advertised to hold a reception. Despite the inconvenient hour of their arrival in Connellsville they outdrew the Democratic spellbinders. In Uniontown the widely advertised Palmer and McCormick campaign meeting did not nearly fill the West End theater. The Grand Opera House was jammed to capacity and hundreds stood in the lobbies out of sight of the speakers for hours, during the Republican meeting.

The visit of Palmer and McCormick to Uniontown did not cause a ripple at the county seat; the arrival of the Republican party was marked by the greatest demonstration ever held in the county seat.

From the time Dr. Brumbaugh left Connellsville in William Duit's big touring car yesterday morning until he arrived in Uniontown late in the afternoon he was given a continuous ovation. By the time Brownsville was reached there were 18 automobiles in the party. There was a parade at Brownsville and following that at the Monongahela House there was speaking from the balcony. George L. Moore presided at that meeting. Dr. Brumbaugh, Henry Houck and Colonel Cragg were the speakers. When they had concluded the demand for a speech from Senator Crow was so insistent that he made one from the automobile in which he was riding. A speech was also demanded from Attorney R. I. Hopwood who climbed into Senator Crow's car and addressed the crowd. While [illegible] were speaking in Brownsville [illegible] Houck sped was to visit the Brownsville and South Brownsville schools. They were escorted by George L. Moore, president of the Brownsville school board. It was interesting work for the candidates; they were in high favor among the school children and as a consequence they were nearly an hour late leaving Brownsville.

[illegible] had gone out from the city to Uniontown by way of Republic. Arriving in that progressive community the party found [illegible] township [illegible] waiting. The delegation [illegible] for the parade [illegible] decided to escort the state candidates to the county seat. Every man of the Republic delegation and there were 1,600 of them when the parade started wore [illegible] phantom [illegible] humorous reference to the plight of their products by the Democrats. They were not "phantoms" to the extent that it could be noticed.

When Uniontown was reached five bands that had already arrived for the parade were massed into one and headed a procession through the principal streets. The party then went to the Titlow Hotel to prepare for the evening's parade and speechmaking.

Connellsville was honored in the parade. Dr. Brumbaugh led the procession in William Duit's automobile which had carried him around the county during the day. The first band in line was the Connellsville Military band. The Tenth Regiment band also participated in the parade as did seven others.

Two live counts emblems of the Republican party were carried in the procession. One of the unusual floats was an allegory. The first was on showed idleness resulting from Democratic rule, the other the prosperity which accompanies Republican government. A Masontown float [illegible] was labeled "Funeral of the Democratic Party." On one float was a goat. The legend read: "We've Got Uncle Davy's Goat."

HUMAN INTEREST SIDE LIGHTS ON THE GREAT WAR IN EUROPE

Advertising Columns of the London Papers Tell Grim Story of Struggle.

Striking Incidents Related In Dispatches From Scene of Action.

THE advertising columns of the London daily papers tell their own story of the war. If the censor went so far as to block out every other line of information, so long as he left the ads. intact the reader would still not lack instruction as to what war means to England. He would still find a great deal of pathos and grim humor.

The most notable change has been in the character of the advertising. It is distinctively war advertising. Of that sort it is more extensive than has ever been known in the history of British journalism. The greatest space gain is probably in the small ad. line. Two or more pages, usually the first and last, of the leading morning papers are as from time immemorial crowded with the print announcements with only a bold initial letter to relieve the monotony.

The conspicuous new feature is the "Killed In Action" or the "Roll of Honor" section.

"Personal" Column an Enigma.

There is not a column and hardly an advertisement among the hundreds on the page but that directly or indirectly suggests some phase of the war. The "Personal" columns, as ever, are enigmas except to those who have shared the secret of communication by this means, but they often savor of patriotism. When one reads "Dearest—Am praying for you; always loyal; love," he may easily imagine it to be some sweetheart's possibly vain attempt to get a word to her soldier lover, she knows not just where.

But one needs to exercise no imagination to see the effect of the war in other instances. Tucked in a personal column haphazard one finds near the top such an appeal as this:

"I want to buy a German helmet. What offers?"

There are many suggestions of how one may help the troops in training, such as this:

"Will anybody lend a pack of harriers or beagles to a regimental mess to be hunted by the officers until ordered abroad?"

There are those who want to locate wounded relatives, such as this:

"If anybody has news of Major A. F. Harg, the King's Own Scottish borderers, wounded at Le Cateau, Aug. 26, will they please communicate with"—

"Gentlemen hike through the war" appears frequently in the appeals for employment.

An "advertiser holding post under military authority" asks if "a kindly disposed lady or gentleman will lend him £15 for special family provision. Will repay by installments of 10 shillings a week."

There is such a one as this to reflect the busy days at the war office:

"Officer at war office, long hours, desires to let or exchange his house, one hour from London."

Instances of Distress.

The "Situation Required" section is always filled to overflowing these days. It contains many pathetic instances of distress. There is no knowing how many of them are genuine. One reads:

"Bright English girl in great distress owing to war. Absolutely at end of resources and disheartened trying to obtain mere existence. Musical, artistic, well educated, fluent French. Will any lady help?"

There is an unusual number of women desiring to dispose of jewelry and other luxuries, suggesting they are in need of funds. "A lady," reads one such advertisement, "wishes to dispose of her fox stole muff (black), quite new; this season's style, cost £10; accept 50 shillings." And there is a "dog lover" who will part with some prize dogs "for the benefit of the Belgian refugees."

Call Landsturm "Daddies."

"Russian soldiers have discovered a nickname for the German landsturm. They call them 'daddies,'" writes the special correspondent of the Outro Rossii of Moscow. "The landsturm consists mostly of fat, middle aged burghers of very good natured appearance, yet it is this same class of troops who have so much distinguished themselves during the numerous incursions of the Germans into Russian territory in the earliest days of the war.

"So inoffensive do they look that the Russian soldiers cannot feel any hatred for them. They shower upon them good natured remarks, saying: 'Oh, you daddy! Fancy you going to war with such a fat stomach!'

"The prisoners, on their part, seem to feel the absence of all hatred in the voice of their captors and confidently smile back at them."

Soldiers' "Hotels."

There has been given out in London a descriptive account of some recent developments in France sent in by an eyewitness attached to the British general headquarters. The account is dated Oct. 13 in France and is in part as follows:

"On the firing line the men sleep and obtain shelter in dugouts they have hollowed or cut under the sides of the trenches. These refuges are raised slightly above the bottom of the trench so as to remain dry in wet weather. Considerable ingenuity has been exercised by the men in naming these shelters. Among the favorite designations are the 'Hotel Cecil,' the 'Ritz hotel,' the 'Billet Doux hotel' and the 'Rue Dormir.'

Windmills For Signaling.

A correspondent of the London Daily Mail, who has been an eyewitness of the East Prussian campaign, says:

"Windmills dot the country and have led to the use of a curious device by the Russians. Russian agents secured possession of several of the windmills during engagements and signaled by turning the wheels so as to disclose to the Russian troops the movements of the enemy behind the ridges upon which the windmills stood. The stratagem was discovered, and many agents working it were shot.

"Another device, to me one of the most spectacular I have ever seen in warfare and which is not generally known, is the following: Barbed wire is in use here, as everywhere, particularly to protect field and machine guns. Now, it happens that East Prussia is largely a grazing country. Imagine the awful and thrilling spectacle of a troop of Cossacks sweeping down upon one of these batteries, driving sheep and cattle before them right on into the tangled mass of wire, charging their horses over the platform of flesh and sabering the gunners in the very trenches behind. This plan was quickly followed by the Germans, who were equally fearless and successful in carrying it out."

Kisses His Son's Flag.

The flag of the Eighty-first French infantry, riddled with bullets and frayed by shell fire, was brought back a glorious invalid to the regimental headquarters at Montpellier. In the court of honor barracks the flag was presented to the troops, who lined up before it with their officers at their head. Opposite the troops stood the family of the sublieutenant and the standard bearer, who fell on the field of battle. The flag was carried by three wounded officers. The commander having made a moving speech, the father of the dead standard bearer approached the flag and pressed his lips to its folds.

Queen With Army In Field.

The queen of the Belgians is with her husband at the headquarters of the Belgian army and is his constant companion except when King Albert approaches the firing line to encourage and direct his troops.

M. Huismans, a Belgian minister of state, in announcing the fact added that King Albert was showing great stoicism and that Queen Elizabeth was sharing his perils and giving an example of dignity and courage worthy of classic times.

Unusual Honor For Hero.

A picturesque incident illustrative of London in wartime occurred in Victoria street. With bagpipes playing martial airs a company of the London Scottish regiment was marching toward the nearby barracks when their captain spied among the crowds on the sidewalk a little Belgian colonel of cavalry in gold lace uniform, but with his left arm in a sling. He was gazing with eager curiosity upon the brawny lads in kilts. The captain promptly saluted the wounded Belgian and then gave the command, "Eyes right!" whereupon the company passed before the little colonel as if he were their reviewing officer. The compliment brought tears to the colonel's eyes, and he stood rigidly at salute until the last of the column had gone by.

Girls Help Dig Trenches.

A dispatch to the Reuter's Telegram company from Petrograd says:

To the local peasantry, among them many girls, is attributed in part the failure of the German attempts to cross the Vistula during the recent fighting. The girls aided the Russian soldiers by digging trenches.

Oddities In the War News.

A German spy disguised himself as an East Indian and joined the British troops leaving India. He got away with it until they reached Marseilles.

It is said the charging of turpinite shells is so dangerous a man can work at it but fifteen minutes a day.

Servian boys of ten and twelve years may be seen daily in Nish marching Austrian prisoners of war to their tasks on the public works. They carry willow riding whips and sing patriotic songs and seem very proud.

An old French ferryman, after the French had blown up a bridge on the river Oise, was compelled to ferry a troop of uhlans across in pursuit. In the middle of the river he capsized the boat, and every German and horse was drowned with himself.

A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph, London, from Paris says:

"The Temps describes the reopening of the Rheims law courts under a hail of shells and says that the public attorney's opening address was almost inaudible owing to the deafening thunder of the guns."

Uses For the Nose.

The triangular pyramid projecting from the center of the face has always had peculiar interest for me. In infancy I used it as a pocket, stowing therein an occasional bean filched from the cook's store, and I remember the stir one such occasioned in the household as well as in me when a canny country doctor put his open mouth to mine and with mighty blast persuaded the bean to stand not upon the order of its exit. Later a coasting accident left me with some nasal vacuity and the ability to run a grass blade up one nostril and down the other. Thus I became persona grata at juvenile circuses, the price of admission for my performance going all the way up from five pins to 3 cents, my profits invariably being paid in pins, the distaff side, I suppose, very properly.—Lucy Elliot Keeler in Atlantic.

"Woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed."—Matthew 26:24.

JUDAS hailed from Southern Palestine, while the other eleven of Jesus' disciples were Galileans. It is inferred that because of superior business qualities Judas was made treasurer of the Apostolic company. Friends of Jesus noted that He and His disciples needed to give their entire time to the heralding of the Kingdom. It is not strange, therefore, that we read that some voluntarily donated money for their support.—Luke 8:3.

Such voluntary donations made it proper that there should be a treasurer for the company, and that he should be of superior business acumen. We find no reason for believing that Judas was a bad man when selected by Jesus to be an Apostle. We have every reason to believe that he developed a bad character even under the most favorable influences—in the continual company of Jesus and the other Apostles, and with the Message of the Kingdom continually in his ears. There was, however, a beginning of his defection; and the Scriptures intimate that his temptation came along the lines of avarice, selfishness, love of money. It is still true that "the love of money is a root of all evil."

A Fulfillment of Prophecy.

Afterward, apparently, the disciples learned that Judas was a thief (John 12:6). Doubtless even when appropriating moneys contributed to the support of the little company, Judas could have some plausible excuse; for sin is always deceptive. Brooding on the subject increased his desire for money, and led his active business mind to hatch out the plot for the betrayal of Jesus.

The record is that when Judas perceived that Jesus had been condemned, he took the money back to the chief priests, wishing to undo his deed. They laughed at him, declaring that it was no concern of theirs, but his own, if he had betrayed innocent blood. Because it was blood money they could not put it into the Temple Treasury again. Instead, they purchased therewith a piece of cheap land, a potter's field, as a burial place for strangers. Thus they fulfilled to the very letter a prophecy which they had probably forgotten.—Matthew 27:9, 10.

The Betrayal of Jesus.

The account implies that Judas was surprised when Jesus was condemned. Apparently he surmised that Jesus, brought to the crucial test, would assert Himself as the Messiah and would triumph over His enemies. Judas thus probably thought that he would hasten the establishment of the Kingdom, in which he hoped to share. Thus he would shine as a hero, as well as demonstrate his financial wisdom and his suitability for the post of Grand Treasurer of the Kingdom. In addition, apparently he was a little angry at Jesus because the Master had approved of Mary's conduct in respect to the spikenard. It was under the impulse of that resentment that he first sought the priests and the scribes to negotiate for the betrayal.

No Hope of a Resurrection.

We are not suggesting excuses for Judas. No excuse can properly be offered for treachery to God and His Cause. We merely point out the fact that every transgressor must first consent in his own mind to his wrong course; the mind, the conscience, must be perverted before each step of sin. Hence Jesus' words are fully justified; "It had been good for that man had he not been born."

Such treachery, such willingness to hand over his Friend, his Teacher, the One whom he had accepted as the Son of God and through whom he had expected the Messianic Kingdom, was perfidy of the worst type. He had been constantly with the Savior, and hence knew of the purity of His life, knew of His loyalty to God. Therefore these things constituted his responsibility and his guilt.

The fact that he committed suicide implied a fulfillment of Jesus' words—that Judas wished that he had not been born. Yet there is a hope for other suicides, because of their ignorance and because Christ died for all. But in the case of Judas all this is discounted by the fact that he had already enjoyed such privileges and had sinned against light and knowledge. The declaration that he went to his own place, his appropriate place, does not signify that he or anybody else is to be tortured eternally as a punishment for sin. Rather, his own place was hopeless oblivion, without prospect of a resurrection. He died like a natural brute beast, nor could argument be shown why such a character should ever have any future opportunity.

Judas Iscariot.

The fact that God had foreknown that one of the Twelve would betray Jesus, the fact that the purchase of the field with the blood-money had been prophesied, did not alter the responsibility of Judas for his own fall. It was not God's foreknowledge that injured him, but his own wrong course.

Servia's Area.

Servia is a compact territory, with an area of 18,754 square miles, measuring 140 miles from east to west and 110 miles from north to south. It is essentially an agricultural country, 60 per cent of its total area being set apart for cultivation.

THE SOISSON.

"THE RING AND THE MAN" TODAY.

An intensely interesting four reel picture play will be presented at the Soisson Theatre today. It is the famous play, "The Ring and the Man" with the celebrated actor Bruce McRae. It is a political drama with many exciting scenes. Mr. and Mrs Vernon Castle appear today in their famous dances. "The Line Rider" is a two reel feature with a good plot. Another pretty drama is "The Old Bell Ringer" and a Joker comedy "The Baseball Fans of Fanville."

Monday will be presented the great comedy, "Mrs Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" with bargain matinee.

"MRS WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH."

Written by a woman, and dramatized by a woman, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" which comes to the Soisson Theatre Monday, matinee and night, October 26, utterly disproves the popular fallacy that women have no sense of humor. The play is thoroughly satisfying, funny in every sense of the word, and the clever lines of the book are heightened to a great degree by the little inimitable touches that only the most clever actors can give and that must be seen to be appreciated. Never has a play been more obviously a character study with the plot woven about it than this of "Mrs Wiggs," but it is surprising how smoothly it leads from one phase to another, and how interesting even the most commonplace incidents become with "Mrs Alice Hegan Rice's halo of appreciable understanding shedding its light upon them. The humor is of the best and highest as it is drawn solely from the little incidents of everyday life that can amuse us so infinitely if we do not let ourselves "get sour," as Mrs Wiggs expresses it. The development of this commonplace side of things is missionary work, for it reminds everyone how much real amusement can come out of even the most unfortunate circumstances and gives a code of living that if carried out would certainly make the world a much better place.

"THE CHARMING WIDOWS."

Eddie Daley, a clever German comedian whose quaint, quiet and yet extremely effective methods of fun making have made him a big favorite is the principal comedian with "The Charming Widows," the new burlesque show which will come to the Soisson Theatre Tuesday, October 27. Mr. Dale is surrounded by a company of classy singers, dancers and fun-makers and the result is a decidely lively brand of entertainment. There is no let up in the merriment from the time the curtain rises on the first act until it falls at the end of the show. The players include Sam Carleton, Hebrew comedian; Bobby Ferns, Negro comedian; Lillian English, prima donna; Pauline Palmer, comedienne; Bessie Miller, soubrette; Harry Peterson and Joe Dolan. The first part is called a "Day in Nice" and the plot concerns the laughable adventures of a number of Americans who are visiting the gay French watering place. The action is frequently interrupted to allow the introduction of singing and dancing numbers in which the principals and a chorus of 22 pretty and vivacious girls participate.

NOVEMBER JOE

The Detective of the Woods

by Hesketh Prichard.

Copyright, 1913, by Hesketh Prichard

PROLOGUE.

One of the most interesting characters in fiction, November Joe, well deserves to take his place in the hall of fame alongside his more famous prototype, Sherlock Holmes. In the woods Sherlock Holmes no doubt would have been of little value in ferreting out criminals, because woodcraft was not in his line. In the city, too, November Joe would not have compared in merit of achievement with Holmes, but in the woods every leaf and twig, stone and bit of moss where it has been in contact with human beings or animals tells its story to the keen eyes and analytical mind of November Joe.

CHAPTER I.

November Joe.

IT happened that in the early autumn of 1908 I, James Quaritch of Quebec, went down to Montreal. I was at the time much engaged in an important business transaction, which after long and complicated negotiations appeared to be nearing a successful issue. A few days after my arrival I dined with Sir Andrew McLerrick, the celebrated nerve specialist and lecturer at McGill university, who had been for many years my friend.

On similar occasions I had usually remained for half an hour after the other guests had departed, so that when he turned from saying his last goodby Sir Andrew found me choosing a fresh cigar.

"I cannot call it to mind, James, that I invited you to help yourself to another smoke," he said.

I laughed.

"Don't mention it, Andrew; I am accustomed to your manners. All the same"—

He watched me light up. "Make the most of it, for it will be some time before you enjoy another."

"I have felt your searching eye upon me more than once tonight. What is it?"

"My dear James, the new mining amalgamation the papers are so full of, and of which I understand that you are the leading spirit, will no doubt be a great success, yet is it really worth the sacrifice of your excellent health?"

"But I feel quite as usual."

"Sleep as much as usual?"

"Perhaps not," I admitted unwillingly.

"Appetite as good as usual?"

"Oh, I don't know."

"Tush, man, James! Stand up." Thereupon he began an examination which merged into a lecture, and the lecture in due course ended in my decision to take a vacation immediately—a long vacation, to be spent beyond reach of letter or telegram in the woods.

"That's right! That's right!" commented Sir Andrew. "What do the horns of that fellow with the big bell, which you have hanging in your office, measure?"

"Fifty nine inches."

"Then go and shoot one with a spread of sixty."

"I believe you are right," said I, "but the worst of it is that my guide, Noel Tribonet, is laid up with rheumatism and will certainly not be fit to go with me just now. Indeed, I doubt if he will ever be much good in the woods again."

"But what if I can recommend you a new man?"

"Thanks, but I have had the trouble of training Noel already."

"I can guarantee that you will not find it necessary to train November Joe."

"November Joe?"

"Yes, do you know him?"

"Curiously enough, I do. He was with me as dishwasher when I was up with Tom Todd some years ago in Maine. He was a boy then. Once when we were on the march and were overtaken by a very bad snowstorm, Todd and the boy had a difference of opinion as to the direction we should take."

"And Joe was right?"

"He was," said I. "Todd didn't like it at all."

"Tom Todd had quite a reputation, hadn't he? Naturally he would not like being put right by a boy. Well, that must be ten years ago, and Joe's twenty four now."

"And a good man in the woods, you say?"

"None better. The most capable on this continent, I verily believe. If Joe is free and can go with you, you will get your moose with the sixty inch horns. I understand that he has entered into some sort of contract with the provincial police."

"With the police?" I repeated.

"Yes. He is to help them in such cases as may lie within the scope of his special experience. He is, indeed, the very last person I should like to have upon my trail had I committed a murder. He is a most skilled and minute observer, and you must not forget that the speciality of a Sherlock Holmes is the everyday routine of a woodsman. Observation and deduction are part and parcel of his daily existence. He literally reads as he runs. The floor of the forest is his page. And when a crime is committed in the woods these facts are very fortunate. There nature is the criminal's best ally. She seems to league herself with him in many ways. Often she delays the discovery of his ill doing; she covers his deeds with her leaves and her snow; his track she washes away with her rain, and more than all she provides him with a vast area of refuge, over which she sends the appointed hours of darkness, during which he can travel fast and far."

"All things considered, it is surprising that so many woods crimes are brought home to their perpetrators."

"There you are forgetting one very important point. I have been present at many trials and the most dangerous witnesses that I have ever seen have been men of the November Joe type—that is, practically illiterate woodsmen. Their evidence has a quality of terrible simplicity. They give minute but unanswerable details. All their experiences are first hand. They bring forward naked facts with sledge hammer results. Where a town bred man would see nothing but a series of blurred footsteps in the morning dew, an ordinary dweller in the woods could learn something from them, but November Joe can often reconstruct the man who made them, sometimes in a manner and with an exactitude that has struck me as little short of marvelous."

"I see he has interested you," said I, half smiling.

"I confess he has. Looked at from a scientific standpoint I consider him the perfect product of his environment. There are few things I would enjoy more than to watch November using his experience and his supernormal senses in the unraveling of some crime of the woods."

I threw the stump of my cigar into the fire.

"You have persuaded me," I said. "I will try to make a start by the end of the week. Where is Joe to be found?"

"As to that, I believe you might get into touch with him at Harding's farm, Silent Water, Beauce."

"I'll write to him."

"Not much use. He only calls for letters when he feels inclined."

"Then I'll go to Harding's and arrange the trip by word of mouth."

"That would certainly be the best plan, and, anyhow, the sooner you get into the woods the better. Besides, you will be more likely to secure Joe by doing that, as he is inclined to be shy of strangers."

I rose and shook hands with my host.

"Remember me to Joe," said he. "I like that young man. Goodby and good luck."

* * * * * * *

Along the borders of Beauce and Maine, between the United States and Canada, lies a land of spruce forest and of hardwood ridges. Here little farms stand on the edge of the big timber, and far beyond them, in the depths of the woodlands, lie lumber camps and the wide flung paths of trappers and pelt hunters.

I left the cars at Silent Water and rode off at once to Harding's, the house of the Beauce farmer where I meant to put up for the night. Mrs. Harding received me genially and placed an excellent supper before me. While I was eating it a squall blew up with the fall of darkness, and I was glad enough to find myself in safe shelter.

Outside the wind was swishing among the pines which inclosed the farmhouse, when inside the telephone bell rang, which connected us with St. George, forty miles distant, rang suddenly and incongruously high above the clamor of the forest noises.

Mrs. Harding took up the receiver, and this is what I heard.

"My husband won't be home tonight; he's gone into St. George. No, I have no one to send. But how can I? There is no one here but me and the children. Well, there's Mr. Quaritch, a sport, staying the night. No, I couldn't ask him."

"Why not?" I inquired.

Mrs. Harding shook her head as she stood still holding the receiver. She was a matron of distinct comeliness, and she cooked amazingly well.

"You can ask me anything," I urged.

"They want some one to carry a message to November Joe," she explained. "It's the provincial police on the phone."

"I'll go."

"Joe made me promise not to send any sports after him," she said doubtfully. "They all want him now he's famous."

"But November Joe is rather a friend of mine. I hunted with him years ago when he lived on the Montmorency."

"Is that so?" Her face relaxed a little. "Well, perhaps"—she conceded.

"Of course I'll carry the message."

"It's quite a way to his place. November doesn't care about strangers. He's a solitary man. You must follow the tote road you were on today fifteen miles, turn west at the deserted lumber camp, cross Charley's brook. Joe lives about two acres up the far bank." She lifted the receiver. "Shall I say you'll go?"

"By all means."

A few seconds later I was at the phone taking my instructions. It appeared that the speaker was the chief of police in Quebec, who was of course well known to me. I will let you have his own words.

"Very good of you, I'm sure, Mr. Quaritch. Yes, we want November Joe to be told that a man named Henry Lyon has been shot in his camp down at Big Tree portage, on Depot river. The news came in just now, telephoned through by a lumberjack who found the body. Tell Joe, please, success means $50 to him. Yes, that's all. Much obliged. Yes, the sooner he hears about it the better. Good night."

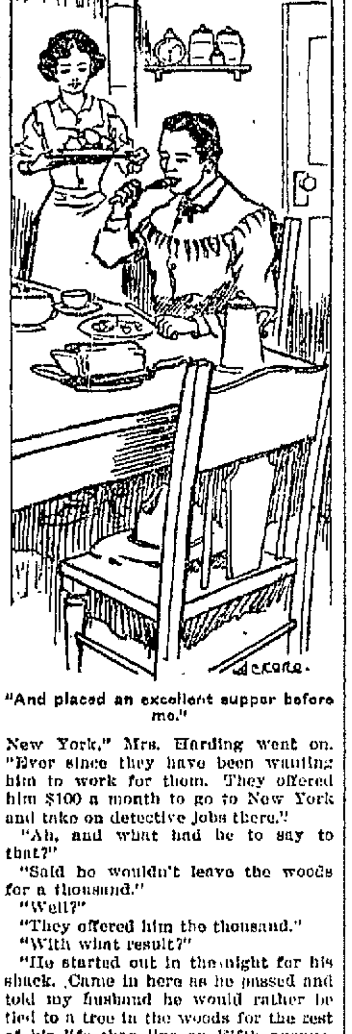
I hung up the receiver, turned to Mrs. Harding and told her the facts.

"So November is connected with police work now?"

"Didn't you read in the newspapers about the 'Long Island Murder?'"

I remembered the case at once; it had been a nine days' wonder of headline and comment, and now I wondered how it was that I missed the mention of Joe's name.

"November was the man who put together that puzzle for them down in New York," Mrs. Harding went on. "Ever since they have been wanting him to work for them. They offered him $100 a month to go to New York and take on detective jobs there."



"And placed an excellent supper before me."

"Ah, and what had he to say to that?"

"Said he wouldn't leave the woods for a thousand."

"Well?"

"They offered him the thousand."

"With what result?"

"He started out in the night for his shack. Came in here as he passed and told my husband he would rather be tied to a tree in the woods for the rest of his life than live on Fifth avenue. The lumberjacks and the guides hereabouts think a lot of him. Now you'd best saddle Laura—that's the big gray mare you'll find in the near stall of the stable—and go right off. There'll be a moon when the storm blows itself out."

By the help of the lantern I saddled Laura and stumbled away into the dark and the wind. For the chief part of the way I had to lead the mare, and the dawn was gray in the open places before I reached the deserted lumber camp, and all the time my mind was busy with memories of November. Boy though he had been when I knew him, his personality had impressed itself upon me by reason of a certain adequate quietness with which he fulfilled the duties, many and disagreeable, which bearded old Tom Todd took a delight in laying upon his young shoulders.

I remembered, too, the expression of humor and mocking tolerance which used to invade the boy's face whenever old Tom was overtaken by one of his habitual fits of talking big. Once when Tom spoke by the camp fire of some lake to which he desired to guide me and of which he stated that the shores had never been trodden by white man's foot Joe had to cover his mouth with his hand. When we were alone, Todd having departed to make some necessary repairs to the canoe, I asked Joe what he meant by laughing at his elders.

"I suppose a boy's foot ain't a man's anyways," remarked Joe innocently, and more he would not say.

The sun was showing over the tree tops when I drew rein by the door of the shack, and at the same moment came in view of the slim but powerful figure of a young man who was busy rolling some gear into a pack. He raised himself and, just as I was about to speak, drawled out:

"My! Mr. Quaritch, you! Who'd a' thought it?"

The young woodsman came forward with a lazy stride and gave me welcome with a curious gentleness that was one of his characteristics, but which left me in doubt as to its geniality.

I feel that I shall never be able to describe November. Suffice it to say that the loose knit boy I remembered had developed into one of the finest specimens of manhood that ever grew up among the balsam trees; near six feet tall, lithe and powerful, with a neck like a column and a straight featured face, the sheer good looks of this son of the woods were disturbing. He was clearly also not only the product but the master of his environment.

"Well, well, Mr. Quaritch, many's the time I've been thinking of the days we had with old Tom way up on the Roustik."

"They were good days, Joe, weren't they?"

"Sure, sure, they were!"

"I hope we shall have some more together."

"If it's hunting you want, I'm glad you're here, Mr. Quaritch. There's a fine buck using around by Widdeney pond. Maybe we will get a look at him come sunset, for he 'most always moves out of the thick bush about dark." Then humor lit a spark in his splendid gray eyes as he looked up at me. "But we'll have a cup o' tea first."

November Joe's (by the way, I ought to mention that his birth in the month of November had given him his name), as I say, November Joe's weakness for tea had in the old days been a target upon which I had often exercised my faculty for irony and banter. The weakness was evidently still alive.

"I had hoped to have a hunt with you, November," said I. "Indeed, that is what I came for, and there's nothing I'd like better than to try for your red deer buck tonight, but while I was at Harding's there was a ringup on the phone, and the provincial police sent through a message for you. It appears that a man named Henry Lyon has been shot in his camp at Big Tree portage. A lumberman found him and phoned the news into Quebec. The chief of police wants you to take on the case. He told me to say that success would mean $50."

"That's too bad," said Joe. "I'd sooner hunt a deer than a man any day. Makes a fellow feel less badlike when he comes up with him. Well, Mr. Quaritch, I must be getting off, but you'll be wanting another guide. There's Charley Paul, down to St. Amiel."

"Look here, November, I don't want Charley Paul or any other guide but you. The fact of the matter is that Sir Andrew McLerrick, the great doctor who was out with you last fall, has told me that I have been overdoing it and must come into the woods for rest. I've three months to put in, and from all I hear of you you won't take three months finding out who murdered Lyon."

Joe looked grave. "I may take more than that," said he, "for maybe I'll never find out at all. But I'm right pleased, Mr. Quaritch, to hear you can stay so long. There's plenty of grub in my shack, and I dare say that I shan't be many days gone."

"How far is it to Big Tree portage?"

"Five miles to the river and eight up it."

"I'd like to go with you."

He gave me one of his quick smiles. "Then I guess you'll have to wait for your breakfast till we are in the canoe. Turn the mare loose. She'll make Harding's by afternoon."

Joe entered the shack and came out again with one or two articles. In five minutes he had put together a tent, my sleeping things, food, ammunition and all necessaries. The whole bundle he secured with his packing strap, lifted it and set out through the woods.

CHAPTER II.

The Crime at Big Tree Portage.

I HAVE sometimes wondered whether he was not irked at the prospect of my proffered companionship and whether he did not at first intend to shake me off by obvious and primitive methods. I had my work, and more than my work, cut out for me in keeping up with November, who, although he was carrying a pack while I was unloaded, traveled through the woods at an astonishing pace.

He moved from the thighs, bending a little forward. However thick the underbrush and the trees, he never once halted or even wavered, but passed onward with neither check nor pause. Meanwhile, I blundered in his tracks until at last, when we came out on the bank of a strong and swiftly flowing river, I was fairly done and felt that had the journey continued much longer I must have been forced to give in.

November threw down his pack and signed to me to remain beside it, while he walked off downstream, only to reappear with a canoe.

The rustle of the water as it hissed against our stem and the wind in the birches and junipers on the banks soon lulled me. I was only awakened by the canoe touching the bank at Big Tree.

Big Tree portage is a recognized camping place situated between the great main lumber camp of Bristow and Harpur and the settlement of St. Amiel, and it lies about equidistant from both. A small shelter of boughs stood beneath the spreading branches of a large fir; the ground all about was strewn with tins and debris. On a bare space in front of the shelter, beside the charred logs of a campfire, a patch of blue caught my eye. This, as my sight grew accustomed to the light, resolved itself into the shape of a huge man. He lay upon his face, and the wind fluttered the blue blouse which he was wearing. It came upon me with a shock that I was looking at the body of Henry Lyon, the murdered man.

November, standing up in the canoe, a wood picture in his buckskin shirt and jeans, surveyed the scene in silence, then pushed off again and paddled up and down, staring at the bank. After a bit he put in and waded ashore.

In obedience to a sign I stayed in the canoe, from which I watched the movements of my companion. First he went to the body and examined it with minute care; next he disappeared within the shelter, came out and stood for a minute staring toward the river; finally he called to me to come ashore.

I had seen November turn the body over, and as I came up I was aware of a great ginger bearded face, horribly pale, confronting the sky. It was easy to see how the man had died, for the bullet had torn a hole at the base of the neck. The ground beside him was torn up as if by some small sharp instruments.

The idea occurred to me that I would try my hand at detection. I went into the shelter. There I found a blanket, two freshly [illegible] bearskins and a pack, which [illegible] open. I came out again and [illegible] examined the ground in all directions. Suddenly looking up, I saw November Joe watching me with a kind of grim and covert amusement.

"What are you looking for?" said he.

"The tracks of the murderer."

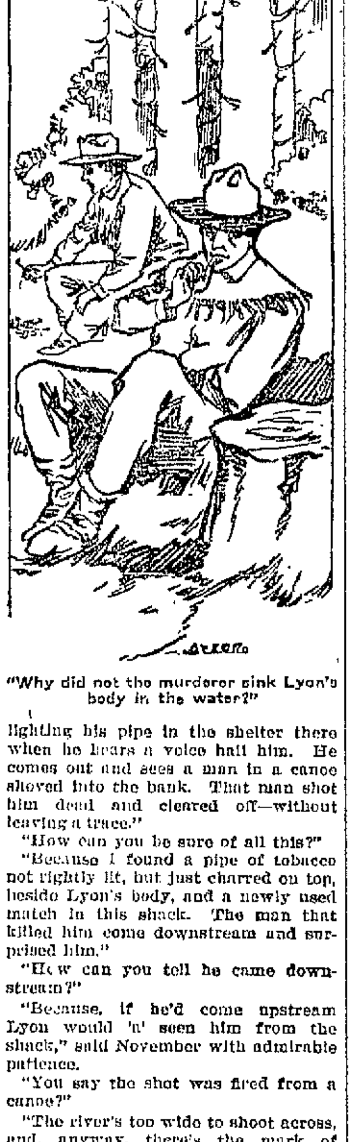
"He didn't make none."

I pointed out the spot where the ground was torn.

"The lumberman that found him—spiked boots," said November.

"How do you know he was not the murderer?"

"He didn't get here till Lyon had been dead for hours. Compare his tracks with Lyon's—much fresher. No, Mr. Sport, that cock won't fight. Lyon reached here in the afternoon of the day before yesterday. He'd been visiting his traps upstream. He hadn't been here more'n a few minutes and was lighting his pipe in the shelter there when he hears a voice hail him. He comes out and sees a man in a canoe shoved into the bank. That man shot him dead and cleared off—without leaving a trace."



"Why did not the murderer sink Lyon's body in the water?"

"How do you be sure of all this?"

"Because I found a pipe of tobacco not rightly lit, but just charred on top, beside Lyon's body, and a newly used match in this shack. The man that killed him come downstream and surprised him."

"How can you tell he came downstream?"

"Because, if he'd come upstream Lyon would 'a' seen him from the shack," said November with admirable patience.

"You say the shot was fired from a canoe?"

"The river's too wide to shoot across, and, anyway, there's the mark of where the canoe rested again the bank. No, this is the work of a right smart woodsman, and he's not left me one clew as to who he is. But I'm not through with him, mister. Such men as he needs catching—let's boil the kettle."

We laid the dead man inside the shack, and sat down beside a fire which we built among the stones on the bank of the river. Here November made tea in true woods fashion, drawing all the strength and bitterness from the leaves by boiling them. I was wondering what he would do next, for it appeared that our chance of catching the murderer was infinitesimal, since he had left no clew save the mark on the bank where his canoe had rested among the reeds while he fired his deadly bullet. I put my thoughts into words.

"You're right," said November. "When a chap who's used to the woods life takes to crime, he's harder to lay hands on than a lynx in a alder patch."

"Why did not the murderer sink Lyon's body in the water? It would have been well hidden there."

"He couldn't trust her; the current's sharp and would put the dead man ashore as like as not," he replied. "And if he'd landed to carry it down to his canoe, he'd have left tracks. And more'n that, Lyon might 'a' laid in that clearing till he was a skeleton, but for the chance of that lumberjack happening along. There's one fact you haven't given much weight to. This shooting was premeditated. The murderer knew that Lyon would camp here. The chances are a hundred to one against their having met by accident. The chap that killed him followed him downstream. Now, suppose I can find Lyon's last camp, I may learn something more. It can't be very far off, for he had a tidy sized pack to carry, besides those green skins, which loaded him a bit. And, anyway, it's my only chance."

So we set out upon our walk. November soon picked up Lyon's trail, leading from Big Tree portage to a disused tote road, which again led us due west between the aisles of the forest. From midday on through the whole of the afternoon we traveled until Joe found the deserted camp.

The very first thing my eye lit upon caused me to cry out in excitement, for side by side were two beds of balsam branches that had evidently been placed under the shelter of the same tent cover. November, then, was right. Lyon had camped with some one on the night before he died.

I called out to him. His quiet patience and an attitude as if rather detached from events fell away from him like a cloak, and with almost uncanny swiftness he was making his examination of the camp. But I was destined to disappointment, for, as far as I could see, Joe discovered neither clew nor anything unusual.

To begin with, he took up and sifted through the layers of balsam boughs which had composed the beds, but apparently made no find. From them he turned quickly to kneel down by the ashy remains of the fire and to examine the charred logs one by one. After that he followed a well marked trail that led away from the lake to a small marsh in the farther part of which masts of dead timber were standing in great profusion. Nearer at hand a number of stumps showed where the campers had chopped the wood for their fire.

After looking closely at these stumps November went swiftly back to the camp and spent the next ten minutes in following the tracks which led in all directions. Then once more he came back to the fire and methodically lifted off one charred stick after another. At the time I could not imagine why he did this, but when I understood it the reason was simple and obvious as was that of his every action when once it was explained.

Before men leave camp they seem instinctively to throw such trifles as they do not require or wish to carry on with them in the fire, which is generally expiring, for a first axiom of the true camper in the woods is never to leave his fire alight behind him in case of a chance ember starting a forest conflagration.

In this case November had taken off nearly every bit of wood before I heard him utter a smothered exclamation as he held up a piece of stick.

I took it into my own hands and looked it over. It was charred, but I saw that one end had been split and the other end sharpened.

"What in the world is it?" I asked, puzzled.

November smiled. "Just evidence," he answered.

I was glad he had at last found something to go upon, for, so far, the camp had appeared to produce parsimoniously little that was suggestive. Nevertheless, I did not see how this little bit of spruce, crudely fashioned and split as it was, would lead us very far.

November spent another few minutes in looking everything over a second time, then he took up his ax and split a couple of logs and lit the fire. Over it he hung his inevitable kettle and boiled up the leaves of our morning brew with a liberal handful freshly added.

"Well," I said, as he touched the end of a burning ember to his pipe, "has this camp helped you?"

"Some," said November. "And you?" He put the question quite seriously, though I suspect not without some inward irony.

"I can see that two men slept under one tent cover, that they cut the wood for their fire in that marsh we visited and that they were here for a day, perhaps two."

"One was here for three days, the other one night," corrected November.

"How can you tell that?"

November pointed to the ground at the far side of the fire.

"To begin with, No. 1 had his camp pitched over there," said he; then, seeing my look of perplexity, he added pityingly: "We've a westerly wind these last two days, but before that the wind was east, and he camped the first night with his back to it. And in the new camp one bed o' boughs is fresher than the other."

The thing seemed so absurdly obvious that I was nettled.

"I suppose there are other indications I haven't noticed," I said.

"There might be some you haven't mentioned," he answered warily.

"What are they?"

"That the man who killed Lyon is thick set and very strong; that he has been a good while in the woods without having gone to a settlement; that he owns a blunt hatchet such as we wood chaps call 'tomahawk No. 3;' that he killed a moose last week; that he can read; that he spent the night before the murder in great trouble of mind and that likely he was a religious kind o' chap."

As November reeled off these details in his quiet, low keyed voice I stared at him in amazement.

"But how can you have found out all that?" I said at last. "If it's correct it's wonderful!"

"I'll tell you, if you want to hear, when I've got my man—if I ever do get him. One thing more is sure, he is a chap who knew Lyon well. The rest of the job lies in the settlement of St. Amiel, where Lyon lived."

We walked back to Big Tree portage and from there ran down in the canoe to St. Amiel, arriving the following evening. About half a mile short of the settlement November landed and set up our camp. Afterward we went on. I had never before visited the place, and I found it to be a little colony of scattered houses straggling beside the river. It possessed two stores and one of the smallest churches I have ever seen.

"You can help me here if you will," said November as we paused before the larger of the stores.

"Of course I will. How?"

"By letting 'em think you've engaged me as your guide, and we've come in to St. Amiel to buy some grub and gear we've run short of."

"All right." And with this arrangement we entered the store.

I will not make any attempt to describe by what roundabout courses of talk November learned all the news of desolate little St. Amiel and of the surrounding countryside. The provincial police had evidently found means to close the mouth of the lumberjack for the time at least, as no hint of Lyon's death had yet drifted back to his native place.

Little by little it came out that only five men were absent from the settlement. Two of these, Fitz and Baxter Gurd, were brothers who had gone on an extended trapping expedition. The other absentees were Highamson, Lyon's father-in-law; Thomas Miller, a professional guide and hunter, and, lastly, Henry Lyon himself, who had gone up river to visit his traps, starting on the previous Friday. The other men had all been away three weeks or more, and all had started in canoes, except Lyon, who, having sold his, went on foot.

Next, by imperceptible degrees, the talk slid round to the subject of Lyon's wife. They had been married four years and had no child. She had been the belle of St. Amiel, and there had been no small competition for her hand. Of the absent men both Miller and Fitz Gurd had been her suitors, and the former and Lyon had never been on good terms since the marriage. The younger Gurd was a wild fellow, and only his brother's influence kept him straight.

Horses In Battle.

The return during a battle of riderless horses to camp is an almost certain sign of a rout that amounts almost to annihilation. A horse may lose its trooper, but unless it is wounded it will nearly always keep on with the rest.

If the battle is lost and the army is driven from the field in confusion the ownerless horses will return to camp or remain on the field, often galloping about in military formation, but avoiding the wounded.

An army horse knows the trumpet call as well as its rider, and when a squadron forms up to charge it will strain at the bit, anxious to be off, but it does not like waiting, doing nothing, especially if exposed to fire.

Many attempts have been made to extend the Geneva convention to animals. The proposal has received sympathy everywhere, but nothing definite has yet been done, though every soldier does his best for his steed so far as in him lies.—Pearson's Weekly.

Crude Cannon.

During the insurrectionary war carried on in Cuba against the rule of Spain the insurgents, being in need of artillery, constructed a cannon of wood. A piece of tree, five feet in length and one foot in diameter, was placed on trestles and a bore burned in it by means of white hot iron pipes. This weapon was bound around with ox hides cut into long strips. It was fired over 100 times before it burst, the projectiles used being fragments of iron, stones and fire hardened clay balls.

Paper cannons have been used by the Chinese in warfare. The cannons were made of paper, hardened and toughened by means of litharge, wax, tallow and white lead and fashioned in the shape of a long tube. A steel core was then inserted, the exterior being bound with wire and rope and steel bands added for extra strength.

Three Wishes.

"Once aloud and twice in silence shalt thou wish, and thy best wish I will give thee." So spake Destiny.

The moments ticked eternityward. The silent wishes were made, but the other—frantically the woman stared at the face of the clock.

Vainly she prodded her mind, but five minutes—four—three remained—two—one—

"Oh!" wailed she aloud. "Oh, could I but choose!"

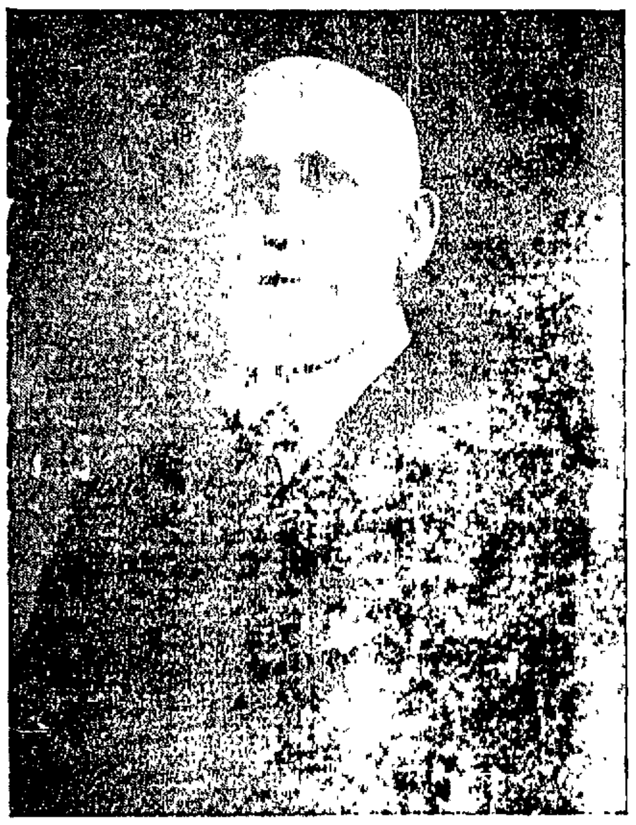
Solemnly the hour struck. "Thy wish is granted thee, the sovereign gift of Surety. A greater lies not upon the knees of the high gods. Beside thy first two (for beauty and love) the power to choose aright is as gold to clay."

And the future proved to this woman that Destiny's choice for her had indeed been right.—Minna Thomas Antrim in Lippincott's.

Fortunes In Lace.

Several millionaire families in New York possess immense fortunes in laces alone. The laces owned by the Astor family are valued at $300,000, those of the Vanderbilt at $500,000. It is said that the New York Four Hundred buy more lace than any collectors in the world. No fewer than twenty wealthy women may be mentioned who each owns laces worth $50,000. Lace is the luxury of the rich. No ordinary middle class collector can hope to possess anything but a few choice pieces, if lucky enough to be able to have those. There are several fine collections among the English aristocracy.

FOR CONGRESS,



ROBERT F. HOPWOOD.

The Republicans of this district are fortunate this year in the choice of their candidate for Congress. Robert F. Hopwood, the nominee, is a man of excellent character, splendid ability, and will make an energetic and faithful representative for all the people. He was unanimously nominated in a free open primary and has the loyal and enthusiastic support of a united party. He is well and favorably known, not only in his native county of Fayette, but throughout this Congressional district, and over a large part of the state. In every campaign for years he has been on the stump in support of the Republican party and its candidates. A leading churchman and Sunday school superintendent, he has ever been foremost in the work for the betterment of society and the welfare of the individual. Always a staunch Republican he has never hesitated to assert his independence and stand for those things which he believed to be right and for the best interests of the people. Clean and upright in his private life and in his associations, his candidacy appeals strongly to all those who believe in pure politics, progressive republicanism and a high standard for Congressional representation.

When he announced his candidacy last spring a large number of the leading citizens of Fayette county who had known Mr. Hopwood for many years gave public expression of their approval and enthusiastic support. The following are extracts from some of these indorsements:

"I consider that Mr. Hopwood would make a most excellent representative. He is a good clean man and will make a strong candidate. He would most ably represent our interests in Congress."

J. V. THOMPSON.

"I'm very much in favor of Mr. Hopwood's candidacy. He has been a faithful Republican all his life. He is a representative of the principles and policies that have dominated the party from the days of its organization and the administration of Lincoln to the present. He can be fairly classed as a sincere, progressive Republican."

JUDGE E. H. REPPERT.

"I think Mr. Hopwood is one of the most available candidates. He is loyal to his friends and loyal to his party. I think that he can be elected without any difficulty. This district should send him to Congress with a substantial majority. He is a first-class man and I would like to see him elected."

HARRY WHYEL.

"I don't think that the party could select a better man than Mr. Hopwood. He is a straightforward, clean man, outspoken in his views. He is a man who, I believe, will suit the wants of every party that desires a clean candidate."

ROBERT L. PATTERSON.

"I do not think the Republicans could select a better man than Mr. Hopwood."

CHARLES F. EGGERS.

"Mr. Hopwood will make a strong candidate. He is conservative, yet will be right on all questions uppermost in the minds of the people today. What we need in Congress and our legislatures are constructive statesmen, men who know what is best for the largest majority of the people and who will suggest, demand and fight for those things."

A. E. JONES.

"I think Bob Hopwood is the logical candidate of the district by all means. He has not been allied with any of the old factions for years and is a cleancut gentleman in every respect."

WALLACE MILLER.

"Mr. Hopwood's candidacy should arouse enthusiasm among the rank and file of the party which should amalgamate the interests to such an extent that the county should give its old time Republican majority. Mr. Hopwood's representation and integrity should stand for sufficient to secure for him the nomination and an election in November."

SAMUEL STERN.

"Hopwood is a good clean man, and carries the respect of the whole county. The party could not put a better man in the field."

W. A. EDMISTON.

"Mr. Hopwood is a fine man. The party could not have found a better one."

MORRIS LEVY.

"Mr. Hopwood's the man. He's an able man, a good pure man, and would make an able representative. I've known him for many years and I never knew anything only what was good of him."

COL. J. M. REID.

"Bob Hopwood is as good a man as there is in the county."

JOSEPH B. KURTZ.

"The Republican party could not nominate a better man than R. F. Hopwood. He is just the man to represent this district. He is a gentleman and has many friends who will work untiringly for him. Mr. Hopwood should be sent to Congress with the biggest majority ever given a candidate in this district."

FRED H. HARMENING.

"I don't think the Republicans could nominate a better man than Hopwood."

DR. R. S. McKEE.

"I've known Mr. Hopwood since 1881. He is a splendid man. He's the proper man to represent the Republican party rightly. He's an honest, square man."

EUGENE O'DONOVAN.

"I have known Mr. Hopwood for many years. He's a man whose honor and integrity have been above reproach. He represents the type of man that is always dependable and straightforward in his individual dealings. It is self-evident that a man with Mr. Hopwood's independence and character could never break faith with the people. Mr. Hopwood is a credit to the community, and when he is elected to Congress he will be a credit to the district."

C. L. SNOWDON.

"Mr. Hopwood is an ideal candidate for Congress. He has always conducted himself as a man should, and by his sterling character has earned and deserves the admiration of the county. Such a man is a credit to our district, and I think the voters will appreciate the chance of sending him to Congress. He is a man of fine character, fine intellect and genial humor."

H. G. HORMELL.

"I have known Mr. Hopwood for 27 years. He has always stood for what is good in both private and public life."

WILLIAM SEDDEN.

"Mr. Hopwood has always been a good man and I have always heard good things of him."

M. G. BULGER.

"Mr. Hopwood is one of the best men I know."

L. C. WAGGONER.

"Hopwood is a fine man and a credit to the county."

JOHN S. GRIFFITHS.

Today--The Opening of Winter Fashions.

—AN EXHIBIT OF STYLE-IMPROVED WOMEN'S APPAREL; FUR AND METAL ORNAMENTED MILLINERY; NEW DRESS AND CLOAKING TEXTURES AND TRIMMINGS; AND THE LATEST CONCEITS IN ACCESSORIES OF DRESS FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

SPECIAL FEATURE:

American-made evening and day wear dresses designed, by suggestion, at a lower original cost by using, in the hidden parts, less expensive foundation materials. This plan in nowise effects the wearing quality of the garments, but rather prolongs their period of use. Sturdy cotton underlinings wear better than silk. The substitution does not alter the beauty of the dress, nor make it fit less properly. It does, however, alter the cost of the garment.

Fashionable dresses for dance, party, tea, theater, reception and church wear, of lace, net, chiffon and velvet, at $15, $19.75, $25 and $29.75—among them a copy of the famous Julia Sanderson evening dress, fur trimmed, at $19.75.

THE OPENING IS A DEMONSTRATION OF OUR READINESS TO SUPPLY THE NEEDS OF WINTER; AND AN EXHIBIT OF NEWER IDEAS, AND NOTABLE STYLE-CHANGES, IN WINTER APPAREL.

Fashion Notes:

—Millinery, although not changed in shapes or size, and still showing a preference for black and velvet, comes forward with a new trimming idea—the use of fur, metal-and-silk flowers.

Metal-like feathers; and a fur-and-ostrich fancie, which the millinery girls will tell you is named "chinchilla."

—Women's Suits are prettiest of any time. Velvet is used with broadcloth; fabric fur and velvet are combined; fur at neck, wrists, coat bottom and skirt bottom, looks wintry—but cozy. Suits of military cut and trim are new; and also new, are suit skirts with three tiers of self-material, or tiers in the back and a tunic in front. Suit coats are long or short, and equally fashionable.

—The Floor of Fashion, where the suits and dresses are shown, will also display newer coats, skirts, waists, corsets, lingerie, negligee and children's apparel

—Men's Dress Clothes will be an attraction for the men. A visit to the Clothing Store, the Shoe Store and the Men's Furnishing Store will repay you with knowledge of all that is new and correct for social wear. The west window shows some of the appointments. The various sections contain full dress suits, dinner jackets, silk hats, throw-overs, vests, neckwear, skirts, jewelry, half hose and shoes.

—Men's Business Wear, working garb, hunting clothes, motorcycle and automobile apparel are featured.

—Dry Goods Store departments are showing their newest dress goods of silk and wool, cloakings, trimmings, jewelry fancies, gloves, handkerchiefs, hosiery and toilet requisites—these in the first floor divisions. Table damask and decorative linens—first floor rear. Blankets, comforts, art needlework and winter underwear—second floor, domestic department.

—The Carpet Room, second floor annex, has new curtains to show. And new rugs, carpets, linoleums and such things, in well-chosen patterns and colorings. Our prices are lowest-in-town for the quality handled here.

—The Basement Store has handy things helpful to the housewife, for kitchen and bathroom; and lovely china, cut glass, art pieces and the like. The Grocery Store, with an entrance from Main street, is well stocked with staple foods and table dainties.
